Karuizawa The Sapphire Geishas
(Set of 2 - Individual Bottle)

Aged in sherry casks for 31 and 36 years respectively, these Sapphire Geishas showcase the rich and lavish characteristics for which Karuizawa's output is so famed.

Established in 1955, Karuizawa, Japanese whisky royalty, would have marked its 65th anniversary this year – its Sapphire Jubilee. Though it has been two decades since the distillery's closure, these Sapphire Geishas pay tribute to its continuing legend, not to mention its place in our hearts.

The Karuizawa Geishas series was created to bring the hidden beauty of the geisha to life. Often profoundly misunderstood, often written off as the product of a bygone age, the artistry of the geisha – much like that of Karuizawa – is manifestly worth celebrating. The labels, designed by our creative director Raj Chavda, pay homage to both the meiko's inaccessible beauty, and the skills and fortitude she must require on her path to becoming a geisha.

The Sapphire Geishas were distilled in the 1980s, matured in ex-sherry casks and moved into glass demijohns when we felt they had reached the peak of perfection. Now, marking 65 years since the distillery was originally established, they stand to take their place in our Karuizawa Geishas collection.

Karuizawa 1981
Single Sherry Cask 35 Years Old

Karuizawa distillery was established in 1955 in the town of Miyota on the southern slopes of Mount Asama. It began production the following year, producing single malt for the Ocean blends from Daikoku Budoshu. Initially it was difficult for the distillery to obtain malt, but a lift on import restrictions in 1958 meant the distillery was able to experiment with the production of a Speyside-esque product, importing the same golden promise barely used at Macallan, and sherry casks. The subsequent quality of output saw it appearing in Japan as a single malt for the first time in the 1980s. Sadly, the Japanese whisky market was not strong at the time, and Karuizawa was closed in 2001 by owners, Mercian, and eventually dismantled. Its legacy is lives on however, with its still relocated to other distilleries in Japan, but predominantly in the hugely sought-after single cask releases that began to appear in 2007, from independent bottler, Number One Drinks. It is now one of the most prestige single malts on the planet, the reverence for which only grows as the remaining stock continues to thin.

The box and bottle bear artwork by renowned 3D artist Fazzino.
